First hand understanding of the diverse world of real estate

For Leslie Singerman, the decision to switch gears in 2010 from working in the garment industry to real estate represented the perfect fit. His volunteer work in the community for such organizations as the Donald Berman Maimonides Geriatric Centre, the Montreal Children's Hospital, the Leukemia Foundation and others already made him a known personality. Both his parents were agents, so he virtually grew up in the industry.

placed in assisted living or has passed away needing to sell a property (for those doing so from another city Leslie is like having a trusted family member guiding them). He will go the extra mile, from hiring reliable cleaning crews or movers.

"I just took care of a family move recently, working directly with three children who live in the United States," explains Leslie. "My goal is to make these transitions as easy as possible. For me dealing with a client is a lot more than just sales. I take pride in assisting them with all of their needs."
